. Attention to the correct dimensions and composition of buildings is essential to assure survival in an uncertain world. The dimensions of buildings are determined by the Modsl tools used for planning, designing, constructing and maintaining them. The construction dimensions of buildings are the basis of the whole building design and construction, therefore their correctness in a building is of great significance. Table 2 provides guidance for the importance of correct proportions and dimensions of buildings. With the increase of building space, it is important to provide functional space for the use of the various people and activities. The basic components of built structures- foundation, columns, beams, girders, braces, architraves, window and doors, walls, roofing, trusses and furniture-are linked together by its basic proportions (Figure II). The three-dimension dimensions of buildings, which are determined by building proportions, are width, length, and height. Effective use of these dimensions, which leads to a building that is used, is achieved by providing adequate interior and facade detailing. The basic structure is based on the size and proportion of the constituent materials such as lumber, steel, etc. In the beginning stages of design, the dimensions of the structure may be determined with greater accuracy than in later stages. Dimensions may be verified from a number of sources such as; building codes, text books, etc. In the case of buildings, the building should be designed at the current load bearing capacity, for its projected life span. The interpretation of building codes, for example, should not include the construction of temporary structures or addition of devices after the building is completed. Finally, it is important to recognize that fashions may influence exterior facade dimensions, such as in dimensioning the width of doors, windows and wall openings. It is essential that facade elements should be measured accurately. This is needed to verify the relationship between the facade and the interiors, with care taken to ensure that the facade is not larger than necessary or too small, and to avoid any over-design. The objective is to provide a minimum amount of space for light, air and movement. All facade elements should have a clear relationship with the interior space of the building and not be cramped, which makes it unenjoyable to use the facade and interior for living purposes. In the case of windows, it should be borne in mind that they should be large
