Although the two diets have similar goals, they are not the same, and it is important to understand the differences before starting one. What is the ketogenic diet? If you have heard of ketogenic diets, they are usually listed as a type of low carb diet. However, unlike low carb diets, the ketogenic diet works by promoting an alternative fuel – fats – for your body. This means your body burns fat rather than carbohydrates. This makes the ketogenic diet highly effective for weight loss. When following a ketogenic diet, you are encouraged to eat only a moderate amount of carbs (around 20g – 40g per day) and instead consume lots of fats. Because the ketogenic diet is typically very high in healthy fats (mainly high-fat, protein-rich foods such as meat, fish and dairy), the diet also reduces hunger and cravings (even without calorie counting). Ketogenic diets are usually recommended for those with chronic health issues such as epilepsy, type 2 diabetes and cardiovascular disease. However, if you're concerned about your weight then you may want to learn more about the ketogenic diet. The ketogenic diet can help to achieve and maintain a healthy body weight by reducing your hunger and cravings, but the fat you consume has to be the right kinds of fats. This isn't always easy when eating a ketogenic diet because most of the fat available is processed. What are the benefits of the ketogenic diet? The ketogenic diet has shown many health benefits, including: Lowering the risk of developing chronic health issues Potentially improving brain function, even in healthy adults
