For More information: Introduction Hadoop is a big data platform which is designed to help enterprises in managing their business resources efficiently. We have received data from various sources and this is where most of the issues happen. Data, either structured or unstructured, has to be stored. There are a number of issues that we face while providing data storage. In this article we are going to discuss some of the options to solve these problems. The problem with data Why are companies not embracing data mining tools? Data mining is the process of discovering interesting and unexpected information in data by using statistical, mathematical and computational methodologies. Companies do have a whole lot of data on customer activities, but the problem is that often the data gathered is poorly structured and clunky, and if it's not stored in a useful way it's difficult to analyze. Data mining has helped in understanding customer behavior, finding trends, connections and correlations and making sense of all the data that companies hold on their customers. Sometimes when we think about a specific email, we receive many emails like that. If we really need to search the keyword we have to receive many emails for that. So, it is waste of time and so to search the keyword we have to received so much mails. So, I thought how to filter this behavior. So, I decided to build a tool that will just filter the unwanted mails from all the unwanted mails. What does a data warehouse do? A data warehouse is a collection of computerized data that accumulates, manages and analyzes information for business decisions, processes and marketing. It is one of the most significant IT technologies for big data platforms. A data warehouse is a repository of the various elements of the company's internal or external systems that are essential to the storage, management and processing of information. Password manager with containers for secure vaults that can be exported. Designer/Programmer: Azure Shrem Sadat Price: Free Last updated on: April 19, 2016 Handy-Dandy Password Manager It's pretty easy to remember all those passwords from various accounts, even if they're several and scattered. Anyway, modern technology is moving fast, so having a password manager is recommended. It has two versions, one for Linux and another for Windows and Mac OS X. Both applications present an easy-to-use interface with a simple-to-use login screen. A Quick Start Guide pops up at launch, in case you need some help. There are options to add, edit or remove accounts, and to add new ones. Some specific information needs to be provided to make the process complete. For instance, you can add a recovery email, so you'll be notified in case the credentials are lost. On the main window, after the title, the following tabs appear: Accounts Information Password Generator A side panel at the left, with only two buttons, shows several categories in which an account could be placed. It's pretty intuitive, but you have to choose between Popular, Profiles, Security, Time and Password Generator. You can create personal, company, educational, Network, Network (password protected), Personal credit cards or even other categories from those preselected. On the left side of the window, you'll find Edit, Preferences, Help and About. As a result, you can easily import or export XML files, or add, edit or remove accounts using the account menu. It's pretty intuitive, just in case you need some assistance. Each account can have different values, like email, name, user name, company, password, PIN, root (administrator) password, recovery email, master password, notes, expiration date or security requirements. You can put the account in any category, and view the values you need. On an ending note Handy-Dandy Password Manager is a great tool to keep your personal information safe, even when you're away from the computer. The multiple option and categories can help you find it in a matter of seconds. Rip Scans are performed on-demand via a completely automated scan engine, as well as on a scheduled time basis. Reverse IP Lookup is enabled to provide the bad actor location for a given IP address, which can be used for redirection purposes, or for the creation of a new rule. In the wake of the Government's decision to charge Fidelity over £1.4m in back taxes and to publish the personal details of those same clients who invested with the firm, I take some time to reflect on the lessons to be learnt about the protection of investors. #10: Trading across borders is too important to be left to the regulators. The best regulators are on the inside, with direct daily access to the market. In the UK, the FCA had 438,372 orders to conduct significant and relevant market surveillance activities, compared to 101,059 orders in the US. This tells us quite a lot about the quality of supervision, but what we need to know is how many of these orders were about specific products – how many were about financial products? The proportion was hardly encouraging. Much of it was related to the situation surrounding the LIBOR scandal, but not all of it. There were 67,593 orders in the US in the same period, and not a single one was related to the LIBOR market. Even more disturbing was the revelation that, of the orders received by the US market surveillance unit, only 300 of the orders were about financial products. As a result of this under-proaction on our part, we saw the LIBOR market being manipulated, with very little action taken by the FCA to bring the perpetrators to book. The irony here is that we have a supervisory authority here in the UK, just as they have one in the US, and yet we allowed this to happen without them intervening. This is not the first time we have seen this happening. Take our dealings with Islamic finance. In 2006, during the financial crisis, there were 11,096 orders to intervene. In 2008, in the wake of the Lehman Brothers bankruptcy, there were only 760 orders. In fact, there were significantly less orders to perform monitoring activities in the wake of the September 11th attacks, with only 144 orders in 2002-2004 compared to 740 in 2009-2013.
