As conventional histological grading is associated with disease course and patient survival in oestrogen receptor-positive breast cancer, its adoption in the clinical management of basal-like breast cancers, which lack expression of oestrogen receptor, progesterone receptor and HER2, is desirable. Pathological grade (Gleason grade, GST) is the most widely used method of characterising the histological grade, but poor agreement between this method and clinical measures of treatment benefit limit its use. To examine the relationship between the presence or absence of circulating tumour cells (CTC) and the histological evaluation. Sixty-one female patients with metastatic breast cancer with available bone marrow aspirates were recruited into the study. Standard cytology and immunocytochemistry were performed to detect CTC. One- and 2-colour flow cytometry was performed using a panel of epithelial and progenitor cell markers. The GSTs were assessed from haematoxylin-eosin-stained slides. Good concordance was observed between haematoxylin-eosin-based GSTs and the immunohistochemical evaluation of basal cytokeratin (CK14) expression ($\kappa=0.62$), with good agreement among individual observers ($\kappa=0.72-0.88$). Lower concordance was observed between the haematoxylin-eosin-based GSTs and GSTs from cytology smears ($\kappa=0.12-0.23$), and among GSTs from different observers ($\kappa=0.28-0.42$). The concordance between the GST and CK14 expression was high ($\kappa=0.72-0.88$). The GST does not predict the number of CTC in patients with metastatic breast cancer with measurable disease. GST does not predict response to systemic therapy and appears to be less accurate than CTC. These findings suggest that CTC may be a more accurate biomarker for disease progression and response to therapy 3e33713323
