Pass Key.Human beings are beginning to understand the harm caused to the environment by excessive use of fossil fuels, as evidenced by the rise in awareness about the greenhouse effect and the Kyoto Protocol on climate change. The Ministry of the Environment is encouraging families to observe energy conservation activities to save energy to cope with the threat of climate change.

With the government's efforts, households are increasingly aware of energy conservation. In a national survey conducted in July 2012, 92 percent of the respondents said that they are aware of "energy conservation," compared with 84 percent in a previous survey in 2006. The Ministry of the Environment released the results of a survey targeting households in 100 areas nationwide conducted in December 2012. In the survey, 84.5 percent of the households said that they were aware of "energy conservation." This increased from 72.6 percent in a survey conducted in 2006.

Of the respondents, 80.4
