"After many years of evaluating what the technology could offer us, we're very excited to be launching FIFA 22 with an improved version of our in-game animation engine that will allow for both a richer, and more accurate simulation of the body mechanics and physicality of real players," said Peter Rauch, Producer, FIFA. "We are using the HyperMotion data collected from our motion capture suits to enhance player movements and interactions and, by doing so, produce a more realistic and immersive experience for players in FIFA. "This technology will benefit all of our major franchise players," Rauch continued. "It gives players the ability to improve their game, to continually learn, and to improve their relationships within their teams, and with their teammates." FIFA 22 will be available on PlayStation 4, Xbox One and Windows PC from 1st July.
