What's new:

"You're an idiot. If you don't answer your cell, you're done." You hear this over and over and over in your head. It's pathetic to have the same words constantly replayed in your head when you forget to put your phone on the charger or forget to charge it. You see Carl saying the words too. In the last few days, you've become a zombie and not even getting out of bed. Carl and your family remind you of zombies. They just move through and don't think of anything else but eating their dinner and sleeping. You didn't plan on cutting Carl's hand off. Ever. It was dark out and you and Carl didn't think anyone would see your hand cutting actions. When the horn blew, Carl jumped. He didn't want to be hurt and you thought your bad luck for messing with someone else had taken over. When the hand comes out of the car, Carl screamed, "Oh my god!" He knew something bad happened. You had your hand in the car, and it wasn't covered in blood, just blood on your hand. Neither one of you saw a blood trail outside of the car and it missed the door, the seat, the floor, the backseat, and it missed you. You knew you were still going to be in trouble. You had to get a good nap and not worry about anything. The cuts were bad but not as bad as the ones that had happened to Carl and your Mom. Your hand would look fine when you played ball with Carl but your hand started hurting but you couldn't say why. The remaining cuts were not nearly as bad as the first few. You could still look at the hand and said that it looked pretty good. The pain was no longer as bad as the first few cuts and you could use your hand once in a while. You didn't feel so sick anymore but the sickness was still there. Your stomach still felt off. Your Mom had cleaned it off but it hadn't felt as good as it did before. The horn always scared you the first time and when it did, you were glad it was over. There was nothing funny about the horn that you could think of, even when Carl started a PSA about not letting the horn be your friend. Hospitalized. You know that already. You were scared that you were going to die. The sickness was bad. You weren't going to be running track like in
