Energy and protein intake during the first month of life. The objective of this study was to determine the energy and protein intake and the rate of energy and protein uptake, according to gender and formula type, in healthy preterm infants during the first month of life. This is a prospective cohort study that was conducted from March 2008 to December 2009 in the Neonatal Unit at Hospital Alfredo Lopez, Montevideo, Uruguay. Thirty-seven live preterm infants were studied; they were divided into 4 groups according to the type of formula used: coconut-based (n = 10), soy-based (n = 9), a balanced mixture of soy and coconut (n = 8) and a cow's milk-based formula (n = 10). Energy and protein intake was measured using the indirect calorimetry technique. Energy and protein uptake were analysed by linear regression (energy and protein intakes vs. age). The median of
