We've just released an update to the Calc Plugin which includes a number of improvements for use with Mecem user-defined coordinate systems. In addition we have released new versions of the Mecem Compiler and Mecem Support Tools for both Mac OS X and Windows 7. The latest version of the Mecem compiler now supports 64-bit graphics cards and is able to handle arbitrary mesh topologies. A new tool, the mecem mex utility, is now available which allows you to directly compile C-source code with the Mecem compiler using a traditional make file. This new functionality is available on Mac OS X and Windows, and adds support for complex and varied mesh topologies, as well as simplification and point-based coordinate systems. In order to ensure compatibility with the latest Mecem updates, the Mecem compiler and tools have been updated to a newer version. These updates should make it easier for you to compile a new version of the Mecem Plugin; in addition, they support support for 64-bit graphics cards. As ever, all of these files are freely available for your use under the GPLv3 licence (not the
