Aston Villa's Jamie Reid scores the third goal of the game against Southampton. Jamie Reid is a revelation. He is a coach who has helped Villa on and off the pitch. Such is the assessment of his mentor Steve Bruce that, just two years ago, the West Brom man was axed at the Hawthorns. "Jamie," Bruce said, "if you'd played the way you have since I've been at Villa, you'd have been with us all the way." That remarkable bit of praise from Bruce may have rankled with his former striker, but Reid's response to his good fortune has been telling. He could easily have thrown that fight at Bruce, but has played his cards right. He has thrived at Aston Villa under Bruce, that much is sure. His rapport with Bruce is obvious, as are the reactions he has picked up from the Scot and his staff, as well as his players. He has been at Villa for three and a half years, but he is confident enough to believe that the best is yet to come for him. He wants to be taken much more seriously. "I'd love to be a manager one day," he says. "I want to be involved in coaching. I'd love to get the opportunity to do that." It is clear that he feels he has made a real impression at Villa. In recent weeks, Reid has been at centre-half, moving to right-back, before playing in the hole and on the wing for the final seven minutes of the 4-1 victory at Southampton. He is a steady player who rarely fancies himself a goalscorer, but his fine finish against the Saints was his first for Villa since May 2011, and he has helped the club's defence keep just one clean sheet in his 35 appearances. Bruce says that he has been consistently impressed with his development. "He's the total package," Bruce says. "He's strong, he looks the part and he's got an intelligent game. "Everyone who has been working with Jamie likes him. He's a
