the basic data format for the type 1 files that autocad uses is called the autolisp format. a file in autolisp can contain a description of every object in a drawing, information about the size and shape of each object, and information about how the objects are arranged. the information in the file is stored in a way that allows it to be quickly read. every object in a drawing is stored in a file as a set of numbers called tags. the values in the tags correspond to other data stored in the same file. for example, if a tag contains the value 1,000, then that tag stores the x coordinate of the object. a tag with the value 2,000 stores the y coordinate of the object. tags can also be used to store the size of an object, the color of an object, or other properties of the object. tags can be processed and used as data. in autolisp, it is possible to determine the x and y coordinates of each object in a drawing by looking for the tags for each object in the file. for example, if the tag for object number 1,500 is 1,000 and the tag for object number 1,600 is 2,000, then the x and y coordinates of the
